

1. FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE POLICY

All supervised practice clinical education experiences must be educational in nature and, consistent with CAATE standards, students will not receive any monetary remuneration during this education experience, excluding scholarships.

All students are encouraged to contact The University of Tulsa Financial Aid office at <http://graduate.utulsa.edu/financial-assistance/> for further information regarding available aid and in order to calculate the cost of attending graduate school at The University of Tulsa. It is also recommended that all students complete and submit a FAFSA.

Currently, there are no University of Tulsa Master of Athletic Training Program specific scholarship awards available. In the event that program specific scholarship funding becomes available awards will be divided, based on academic level, among all students who qualify. Students who are on academic probation will not receive scholarship money. Students who have a tuition waiver, full scholarship, or other monies that cover tuition would not qualify for athletic training scholarship money per university policy.

Students, who qualify for assistance through the federal work-study program, can be employed by the Athletic Department Athletic Training Room as a work-study student. This is not a part of the Athletic Training education. Therefore, any work done as a part of work-study does not count as clinical education and vice versa. Work Study typically consists of off hours to assist with athletic training room maintenance and filing documents. While working as a work-study student, athletic training students cannot provide any patient care or perform any tasks that are within the scope of practice of an athletic trainer.

Students are encouraged to make application for the following awards and fellowships (membership may be required):
